What a week the Keystone Conference was! Thank you, everyone: Keystone Conference & TransCentralPA staffers, helpers, attendees, vendors, presenters, musicians, and hotel staff...thank you. March 8 through 13 were a whirlwind several days of magic and goodness, and the highlight of my year.

From the President

Jeanine Ruhsam

The growing spirit of collaboration and partnership within our diverse but similar communities was remarkably evident this year as our efforts to reach out were returned.

The joint effort of Equality PA, NCTE, the Task Force and TransCentralPA in effecting the new gender marker change policy at PennDOT was recognized with the presence on stage during Friday's luncheon of Ted Martin, Executive Director of EQPA and Mara Kiesling, Executive Director of NCTE along with the President and Vice President of TransCentralPA, parent organization of the Keystone Conference. We were proud to present donations to both Ted and Mara for the excellent work they and their respective organizations do for our community.

The generous volunteer efforts of members of the LGBT Center of Central PA, the Central PA Gay & Lesbian Chamber of Commerce, TransCentralPA and Equality PA resulted in a very successful "Date of Your Dreams" charity auction that made the Butterfly Ball for LGBT youth possible...and exceeded the funds needed for that event to the point that we were able to present a check for the remaining funds to the Common Roads program for LGBT youth.

Volunteers and representatives from the Pennsylvania Coalition Against Rape (PCAR) and the National Resource Center on Domestic Violence (NRC DV) were highly visible as vendors, program advertisers and workshop presenters at Keystone. Two weeks later these ladies hosted the third annual Harrisburg production of The Vagina Monologues, Eve Ensler's award winning play, to raise money and awareness for local organizations that work to stop violence against women and girls. For the second year five transwomen (four from TransCentralPA) were cast members, and one of the Monologues was about violence against transwomen. Most significant, though, was the decision of the producers to make TransCentralPA the beneficiary of the show's profits! We are very honored and humbled with this recognition and award, and we look forward to continuing our work with these organizations to end domestic violence and rape and to provide shelter and support for victims.

With a warm heart and thanks to all,

Jeanine Ruhsam

An $850 donation to Common Roads, the LGBT Community Center's youth program, was made by TransCentralPA from the money raised at the Keystone Conference's 'Date of Your Dreams' charity auction, Keystone Bingo, Butterfly Ball and other donations for the youth programs. An additional $850 was raised that is being set aside for next year's Butterfly Ball.

TransCentralPA receives nearly $2000 from the Pennsylvania Coalition Against Domestic Violence (PCADV) as the sole beneficiary of the 2011 Vagina Monologues. Danni Fi., Kate Ca., Jessie Go., and Cecilia Wa., participated in this year's performance. Thank you ladies and THANK YOU PCADV!

Pride Parade Cancelled. We just received word from the organizers that the parade portion has been cancelled, but the Pride Festival is still on for July 30th. Unfortunately, it has become cost prohibitive to hold the parade. We'll have more information on TransCentralPA's participation at the June meeting.

New Federal Report Urges Government to Study Trans Health

Washington, DC: The National Center for Transgender Equality applauds the Institute of Medicine (IOM) on its report issued today, "The Health of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgender People: Building a Foundation for Better Understanding." The report represents the first ever review of LGBT health disparities and the need for substantially increased federal research into the health status of lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people.

The new report can be accessed here.

NCTE Executive Director Mara Keisling noted, "When NCTE made a presentation to the IOM in February 2010, we highlighted the urgent need for more data to better understand the health disparities that transgender people face—especially data from respected federal studies. It is clear that the IOM heard us and agrees."

As Congresswoman Tammy Baldwin (D-WI) explained so well in a statement this morning, "We can't overcome LGBT health disparities until we know what those disparities are and where they exist. Once we have solid data, the proper responses will follow."

Baldwin will soon reintroduce the Ending LGBT Health Disparities Act, building on the IOM report's recommendations.

This study should be a wake-up call for those government researchers and policymakers who have resisted asking questions in federal surveys about respondents' gender identities. NCTE will continue advocating with allies for the inclusion of transgender people and our lives in federal research and evidence-based policy solutions. Recommendations from the report include:

Recommendation 1. NIH should implement a research agenda designed to advance knowledge and understanding of LGBT health.

Recommendation 2. Data on sexual orientation and gender identity should be collected in federally funded surveys administered by the Department of Health and Human Services and in other relevant federally funded surveys.

Recommendation 3. Data on sexual orientation and gender identity should be collected in electronic health records.

Recommendation 4. NIH should support the development and standardization of sexual orientation and gender identity measures.

Recommendation 5. NIH should support methodological research that relates to LGBT health.

Recommendation 6. A comprehensive research training approach should be created to strengthen LGBT health research at NIH.

Recommendation 7. NIH should encourage grant applicants to address explicitly the inclusion or exclusion of sexual and gender minorities in their samples.

Historic First Civil Rights Commission Hearing on LGBT Issues

This month, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights will hold its first-ever hearing to specifically address the civil rights of LGBT people, and they need to hear from you.

The hearing, on May 13th, will address peer violence and bullying of transgender, gay, lesbian, bisexual and other minority students. To inform this hearing and their eventual report, the Commission needs to hear from transgender and gender non-conforming youth and parents about individual stories of peer violence and bullying and how they affect young people's lives.

Among those testifying will be Tammy Aaberg, a parent advocate who lost her son to homophobic bullying; and Eliza Bayard, Executive Director of GLSEN. Your personal stories will add a great deal to the hearing.

This is an incredible opportunity to make transgender stories and voices heard and inform policymakers of the dire challenges facing transgender youth today. If you or someone you know has a story of being bullied, harassed, abused, or assaulted by other youth because of gender bias, we need you to share your story. We need as many stories as possible to illustrate the scope and seriousness of this problem for our community.

Your letter doesn't need to be formal or in any particular format. Just tell them what happened, who was involved (students, staff, administrators), what the school did or didn't do to address the problem, and how it affected or is affecting you. It doesn't have to be your own story -- you can also write about an experience that happened to a family member or friend.

You can suggest things that could have prevented the abuse or at least helped in some way. If you are comfortable attaching a photograph, we encourage you to do so. If you are not comfortable using your full name, please use at least an initial to identify yourself and others involved. It would also be extremely helpful if you could identify your school, town, or at least your state or region.

Letters should be sent, if possible, by Sunday, May 1, 2011 for introduction into the Commission's record in advance of the May 13 hearing in D.C., but may be submitted later. We recommend submitting stories to Alec Deull, staff member for Commissioner Roberta Achtenberg, at deullusccr@gmail.com. We encourage you to also send a copy to us at NCTE@TransEquality.org.

Black & White Party Goes Broadway - The Show Must Go On

The Black & White Party, Central PA's annual HIV/AIDS fundraiser, 6:00 PM, May 14th at the Zembo Shrine in Harrisburg, PA .

An evening of nearly non-stop entertainment starting in the beautiful Reception Hall and Tile Room, featuring The Shueys www.shueymusic.com and a fabulous silent auction of wonderful items and packages donated by local businesses. Enjoy a buffet of food from various restaurants around the area. After brief remarks and the presentation of the John Folby Award of Excellence in the Field of HIV & AIDS the party moves to the Zembo Shrine Auditorium.

The evening's big show opens with an amazing Broadway review, directed by Chad-Alan Carr and featuring a very talented cast of nearly 50 local entertainers. Next up is off-Broadway Star Gordon Michaels. The night just keeps getting bigger and bigger when Katie Robinette premieres her new dance single, "On My Mind" at the Black & White Party on May 14th. (First public performance anywhere!) Sure to be a hit, her single is scheduled to be released on May 10th and will be available on iTunes. During the entire week following the B&W Party, Katie is donating 100% of the proceeds from iTunes sales to B&W. Check out her site www.katierobinette.com and don't miss Katie and her dancers.

Martha Wash blows the party up at 11:00. From being the uncredited powerhouse vocalist behind C+C Music Factory's classic "Gonna Make You Sweat (Everybody Dance Now)", to seeing her debut solo single "carry On" reach the #1 spot - in her own name - Martha has unquestionably made her mark in music history. Martha Wash and the Weather Girls' hit song, "It's Raining Men" celebrates it's 30th anniversary this year. www.martha-wash.com

Following Martha Wash, the Black & White Party keeps the energy and the dancing going with DJ Ryan Walter. <http://djryanwalter.yolasite.com/>

Donna Rose leaves Center

Since joining the LGBT Community Center in November as our first Executive Director, Donna Rose has been a tireless advocate for the center and its constituents throughout central Pennsylvania. Because of her obvious passion, her excellent public-speaking skills, and her media-relations expertise, she has increased the visibility of the center, created a significant amount of good will in the community and inspired people to reach for their best authentic selves.

While Donna firmly shares the strategic goals of the Center and her work over the past several months has laid firm groundwork for building important alliances within and outside of the LGBT community, differences over how to meet those shared goals and other considerations have brought us to the conclusion that an amicable termination of our formal relationship is in everyone's best interest. Donna's last official day as the Executive Director at the Center will be Friday, March 18.

Donna has offered to help the Center through this latest transition, and the board of directors is grateful for the service she that she has provided during her time here. We wish her all the best as she moves toward the next phase of her extraordinary journey.

Sincerely,

Elizabeth Mullaugh

Updated Equal Employment Opportunity Policy Bars Discrimination Based on Gender Identity

TLDEF applauds the United States Department of Labor's announcement yesterday that it has taken steps to protect its transgender workers from employment discrimination. The Department of Labor added gender identity as a protected category in its equal employment opportunity statement. The policy applies to all hiring, promotion and disciplinary practices for the approximately 17,000 employees of the Department of Labor.

"Whether in private or public employment, what matters is not who you are, but how you do your job," said TLDEF executive director Michael Silverman. "The Department of Labor now joins the many public and private employers that have recognized that discrimination is bad business. We applaud Labor Secretary Hilda Solis for her leadership on this issue."

Transgender people face tremendous discrimination in the workplace. In a recent survey, 47% of transgender people reported being fired, or denied a job or promotion, just because of who they are. In a recent case, TLDEF filed a lawsuit on behalf of a transgender man who was fired from a male-only job solely because he is transgender.

"Employers like the Department of Labor set an example for other employers to follow. It is a great day when diversity is embraced and discrimination is rejected in the workplace," added Silverman.

Did You Know?

Prince William and Kate Middleton invited a transgender pilot to attend their impending nuptials on April 29, 2011. Flight Lieutenant Ayla Holdom is among the 1,000 people on the ultra exclusive guest list. Holdom is a team member with Prince William in the military on his Search and Rescue Team.

The UK tabloid The Sun, which first reported the exclusive, ran the story with the headline: "Prince William's invites for his RAF pals and transsexual."

Holdom, 29, is in the process of transition, which is expected to be completed this year.

Ally Attorney Awarded for Trans Work

reprinted from The Philadelphia Gay News by Jen Colletta

Earlier this month, the Young Lawyers' Division of the Philadelphia Bar Association honored a local attorney for the countless hours of pro-bono assistance she's offered to low-income transpeople.

Natalie Hrubos was presented with the Craig M. Perry Service Award during the YLD's annual meeting April 14.

A labor and employment attorney who recently joined firm Greenberg Traurig LLP, Hrubos has worked with more than 50 transgender clients over the past few years to help them navigate the often-complex processes for document and identification changes associated with a transition.

Hrubos is an ally who first began lending her services to the trans community during her education at Temple University Law School.

She carried out her clinical work during school at the LGBT Law Clinic that was then situated at Equality Advocates, and which has since been moved to Mazzoni Center, where she now sits on the legal advisory board for the legal services department.

During her time interning at the clinic, Hrubos said she was struck by the high volume of requests for assistance she and other intake interns received from trans community members.

"We got a lot of calls from transgender individuals seeking help with legal name changes and correcting their identity documents," she said. "And I was really interested in assisting in this area because it's such an important part of someone's life. It's so important for people to have appropriate identity documents, and it's often very different for a lot of transgender individuals to have access to these."

Hrubos returned for an advanced clinical the next semester in which she focused exclusively on trans clients and, when she graduated in 2009, was compelled to continue taking on such cases pro-bono.

While interning at the clinic, Hrubos had worked with department director Amara Chaudhry to press the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation to relax its gender-marker rules, which it eventually did last summer.

"We were aggravated by how the rules on gender-marker changes were preventing our clients from accessing appropriate identity documentation, and so we reached out to PennDOT to begin the conversation about changing the rules to better reflect the realities of trans people's lives," Hrubos said.

The rule change allowed for trans individuals to correct their genders on their state identification cards without having to have actually undergone sex-reassignment surgery, which Hrubos said has been helpful, although making such a change on birth certificates is still challenging.

Despite the numerous obstacles the trans community must overcome in securing proper identification, Hrubos said there is a dearth of opportunities for legal assistance tailored to the specific needs of transgender individuals.

"There's definitely a severe lack of access to trans-competent services even here in Philadelphia, and then when you go beyond the city into other surrounding areas, there's often really nothing for this community. The folks at Mazzoni Center do a fantastic job, but there are only two attorneys there and the law students, so it's difficult for them to fulfill the needs. I've been working on the legal name changes, but there are so many other legal obstacles facing the trans community — employment issues, prisoners' rights, health-care access, immigration, basically every aspect of the law — and the community often can't get access to attorneys who've been trained to be culturally competent in this area."

Hrubos sits on the programming committee for the annual Trans-Health Conference, coming up in June, and which this year will offer a cultural-competence training for attorneys and another session that educates lawyers on how to advocate for trans and gender-variant youth.

She planned and organized the conference's first-ever legal clinic and Continuing Legal Education program, both of which will return this year.

As a result of her experience with trans clients, Hrubos has begun advising employers on the issues this community faces in the workplace and how organizations can create the most diverse and accepting workforces. In that vein, Hrubos will present "Creating a Trans-Friendly Work Environment: What Every Employer Needs to Know" during this year's THC.

Hrubos said that the Craig M. Perry Award is not only a recognition of the myriad pro-bono work she's done personally, but also of the fact that this type of work is needed and valued.

"It's an obvious honor to receive an award for putting time into something. But I'm even more excited about it because it comes from the Philadelphia Bar Association, which isn't trans-specific or LGBT-specific. It's an organization that represents the broader legal community, so it's really great to know that there support for this type of work and interest in this from the broader community."
